A Little Laugh

Where can a man buy a cap for his knee,
Or the key to a lock of is hair?
Can his eyes be called an academy because
There are pupils there?
Is the crown of your head where jewels are found?
Who travels the bridge of your nose?
If you wanted to shingle the roof of your mouth,
Would you use the nails of your toes?
Can you sit in the shade of the palm of your hand
Or beat on the drum of your ear?
Can the calf in your leg eat the corn off your toe?
Then why not grow corn on the ear?
Can the crook of your elbow be sent to jail?
If so, just what did he do?
How can you sharpen your shoulder blades?
I'll be darned if I know - do you?

On Wednesday, March 13, the BCCS staff enjoyed sponsoring a luncheon for the Marie Yeager Cancer Center physicians and staff. While we were meeting and greeting, we discovered we all have one common goal besides eating! Our goal is to help and support patients in their fight against cancer. Anyone who has been diagnosed with cancer or has a family member with cancer, please do not hesitate to call us at 269-429-3281 or 269-465-5257.

Understanding Cancer Prognosis

Key Points

- A prognosis is an estimate of the likely course and outcome of a disease.
- Many factors affect the prognosis of a person with cancer, including the type, location, and stage of the cancer.
- When estimating a patient's prognosis, doctors usually use statistics based on data from groups of people whose situations are most similar to that of the patient.
- Doctors cannot estimate with certainty what the outcome will be for an individual cancer patient.

1. What is a prognosis?

A prognosis is an estimate of the likely course and outcome of a disease. The prognosis of a patient diagnosed with cancer is often viewed as the chance that the disease will be treated successfully and that the patient will recover.

2. What factors affect a patient's prognosis?

Many factors can influence the prognosis of a person with cancer. Among the most important are the type and location of the cancer, the stage of the disease (the extent to which the cancer has spread in the body), and the cancer's grade (how abnormal the cancer cells look under a microscope—an indicator of how quickly the cancer is likely to grow and spread).

Other factors that affect prognosis include the biological and genetic properties of the cancer cells (these properties, which are sometimes called biomarkers, can be determined by specific lab and imaging tests), the patient's age and overall general health, and the extent to which the patient's cancer responds to treatment.

3. How do statistics contribute to predicting a patient's prognosis?

In estimating a cancer patient's prognosis, doctors consider the characteristics of the patient's disease, the available treatment options, and any health problems the patient may have that could affect the course of the disease or its ability to be treated successfully.

The doctor bases the prognosis, in large part, on information researchers have collected over many years about hundreds or even thousands of people with the same type of cancer. When possible, doctors use statistics based on groups of people whose situations are most similar to that of the patient.

4. Is it helpful to know the prognosis?

Cancer patients and their loved ones face many unknowns. Understanding their disease and what to expect can help patients and their loved ones make decisions about treatment, supportive and palliative care, rehabilitation, and personal matters, such as financial matters. Seeking information about prognosis is a personal decision.

Many people with cancer want to know their prognosis. They find it easier to cope when they know the likely course of their disease. Some patients may ask their doctor about survival statistics or search for this information on their own. Other people find statistical information confusing and frightening, and they think it is too impersonal to be of value to them. It is up to each patient to decide how much information he or she wants.

A doctor who is most familiar with a patient's situation is in the best position to discuss his or her prognosis and explain what the statistics may mean.

5. What is the prognosis if a patient decides not to have treatment?

Because everyone's situation is different (see Question 2), this question can be difficult to answer. Also, information used in making a prognosis often comes from studies that have compared new treatments with existing treatments rather than with "no treatment." Therefore, it is not always easy for doctors to accurately estimate the prognosis of a patient who decides not to have treatment. However, as mentioned above (see Question 4), a doctor who is most familiar with a patient's situation is in the best position to discuss his or her prognosis. There are many reasons why patients may decide not to have treatment. Some patients may be concerned that the benefits of cancer treatments will be outweighed by the side effects. Patients should discuss this concern with their doctor or other health care provider.

Many medications are available to prevent or control the side effects caused by cancer treatments.

Some patients may decide at some point not to have treatment if they know that their type and stage of cancer has a poor prognosis, despite treatment. Patients who choose not to have active cancer treatment should talk with their doctor to ensure that they get palliative treatment to help with the symptoms caused by their disease.

In these cases, patients may want to think about clinical trials. Clinical trials are research studies that involve people. They test new ways to prevent, detect, diagnose, or treat diseases.

People who take part in cancer clinical trials have an opportunity to contribute to scientists' knowledge about cancer and to help in the development of improved cancer therapies. They also receive state-of-the-art care from cancer experts.

People interested in taking part in a clinical trial should talk with their doctor. Information about clinical trials is available from NCI's Cancer Information Service at 1-800-4-CANCER (1-800-422-6237) and in the NCI booklet, Taking Part in Cancer Treatment Research Studies
